FEATURE BREED

DORKING

It's purely British ancestry makes the Dorking one of the oldest domesticated fowls in lineage. A Roman writer described the Dorking type in AD45 and no doubt such birds were found in England by Julius Caesar. They are a quiet stately bird which matures slowly.

Their type is massive, long and deep with a stout beak. Comb is single or rose depending on colour. Their neck is short and well covered with hackle feathers. Legs are short and thighs are large. They have short round shanks. They have five toes. Rear toes must be separated and not joined.

They are a large meat white skinned table bird and lay a large white to tinted egg. They are very good mothers and can sit on 12-18 eggs.

The town of Dorking in England recently erected a large statue of a Dorking Cock in recognition of their association with the breed.

There are 5 recognised colours:

- Silver Grey
- Cuckoo
- White
- Red
- Dark

Their standard weights are:

- Cocks 4.55 – 6.35 kgs
- Hens 3.6 – 4.35 kgs
- Bantams – Males 1190 – 1415 grams, Females 1020 – 1255 grams
